Amazon & the ‘forum shopping’ question

The world’s largest online retailer is battling multiple regulators in its bid to stay dominant in India’s e-commerce market

SUBHOMOY BHATTACHARJEE
New Delhi, 29 June

Several regulators are being drawn into the battle being fought by Amazon, Walmart-owned Flipkart and Reliance Retail for a dominant position in the fast growing Indian e-commerce market.

This overlap is significant. Among all the geographies where Amazon is fighting regulators, India is the only place where its lines are also tangled in a major corporate battle, this one with India’s largest company by market capitalisation over the acquisition of Mumbai-based Future Group’s retail chain, the country’s second largest. No other corporate entity in any country offers a challenge to Amazon’s hegemony in a way Reliance Industries does — and the final hearing of an arbitration case filed at the Singapore International Arbitration Centre between the two this Friday (July 2) may decide at least some of these issues.

This legal battle between one of the world’s most powerful corporations and one of India’s most powerful conglomerates could be complicated by a host of other developments. One is the Competition Commission of India’s (CCI’s) investigation into Amazon and Flipkart’s business practices. The other is the anti-trust investigation that Amazon, along with Apple, Google and Facebook, face in the US, not least because Google and Facebook are stakeholders in the Reliance group’s Jio Platforms with 7.3 and 9.93 per cent, respectively. The Indian stock market administration and corporate tribunals are also involved in this battle.

Commerce Minister Piyush Goyal recently used the term “forum shopping” against Amazon and Flipkart, which refers to the practice of offending parties choosing between two courts in a country’s legal system. “...They should let the Competition Commission of India investigate if they were doing honest business... the reluctance shows they weren’t doing it right,” he said.

Goyal was responding to appeals by Amazon and Flipkart to a division bench of the Karnataka High Court against a single-judge bench order of the same court that had vacated a stay these companies had obtained against CCI’s investigation. CCI, however, does not report to Goyal but to the ministry of corporate affairs headed by Finance Minister Nirmala Sitharaman. The minister’s comments against the two could, therefore, possibly be an indication of how the government views the case.

The corporate battle lines were drawn when Amazon filed an arbitration case against the Future Group in March this year. This was after Reliance Retail Ventures (RRVL), the group’s retail arm that owns the

The challenges and counter-challenges are a battle for getting the largest slice of India’s e-commerce market, expected to reach $188 billion by 2025, according to Grant Thornton, from $35 billion now

Reliance Fresh chain, paid ₹24,713 crore in August 2020 to acquire six companies of the Future Group. Amazon contested this deal saying it had the first right of refusal to any deal with the Future Group via a 49 per cent stake in Future Coupons that it acquired in 2019. Though the CCI has cleared the RRVL-Future Group deal, Amazon has not filed an objection with the Indian fair market regulator but moved Singapore, presumably because orders under the Indian competition laws cannot be the subject of arbitration in India. The companies involved in the battle are, therefore, bracing for a busy July. These challenges and counter-challenges are a battle for getting the largest slice of the Indian e-commerce market, expected to reach $188 billion by 2025, according to accountancy Grant Thornton, from about $35 billion now.

But more than one regulator is being drawn into this particular battle. The National Company Law Tribunal (NCLT) has to issue orders on Reliance Retail’s plea to seek shareholders’ approval for the deal with the Future Group. This month, it reserved its orders on approving the merger. NCLT permission is needed for the shareholders and creditors to consider and approve the proposed merger deal. Because of the delay, Reliance Retail has extended what is known as “long stop” date, the date by when all the conditions precedent for a deal have to be met for the transaction to be completed.

In November last year, meanwhile, the National Stock Exchange (NSE) had pulled up Future Group for not making timely market disclosures about efforts by Amazon to block the asset sale. And if the arbitration case by Amazon goes through in its favour, Indian courts will have a hard time deciding if such awards can be implemented against an Indian entity.

Then again, if an Indian data protection authority is established within this year, some strands of the argument between RRVL and Amazon could land there, too, since the government insists that data must be processed within India. This could be difficult for Amazon.

The tussle with governments is a familiar territory for Amazon since it, along with Apple, Google and Facebook, face potentially similar charges in the US. The US Congress is debating an expansion of the scope of antitrust investigations to take on these companies. The attorneys general for California and New York and the US Federal Trade Commission are investigating Amazon, while the US Justice Department has been probing Apple. But these will take time to be settled.

As a result, these issues could take time to be settled in India, too. Antitrust cases, which is what the CCI investigation against Amazon and Flipkart amounts to, present difficulties for the regulators to prove conclusively. In the case of Google, CCI gave its order only after the EU did so and in doing so stuck closely to the EU argument. The fact that Facebook and Google are both stakeholders in RIL makes life difficult for CCI too as any anticompetitive evidence it marshals against Amazon and Flipkart could apply equally well against the social media giants since they, too, are two-way platforms for sellers and buyers.

Despite these caveats, the Indian face-off is possibly the most fascinating battle the internet economy has thrown up. The obvious question is whether the involvement of multiple regulators could lead to regulatory capture by one or more of the parties involved. “It is difficult to say, but given the wealth of regulators in the sector, it is quite possible for companies to do forum shopping,” said Avirup Bose, professor (competition law and policy) at Jindal Global Law School, OP Jindal University. This year could well yield some answers.

Making sense of Jet’s juggle for airport slots

ANEESH PHADNIS
Mumbai, 29 June

The National Company Law Tribunal (NCLT) cleared a plan to revive Jet Airways last week. The Kalrock-Jalan consortium, whose proposal got the NCLT nod, hopes to restart Jet Airways as a full service airline with 25-30 aircraft. The availability of key slots at airports will be crucial for the revival and is the consortium’s main demand. Let’s find out how slots are assigned to an airline.

What is an airport slot and what determines its availability?

A slot is a permission given by an airport to an airline to operate a flight at a specified date and time. The number of flights an airport can handle depends on the availability of slots; and these are influenced by runway and terminal building capacity as also availability of parking bays. The slots may not necessarily double on the addition of a second runway. Airspace restrictions also influence them.

What are the rules for slot allotment?

The Slot Allocation Guidelines of 2013 lay down the process. These are modelled on the International Air Transport Association (IATA) worldwide slot guidelines. Airports are classified into three levels based on the traffic load. A slot coordinator is appointed at congested airports to allocate slots. Generally, slot allotment takes place twice a year: for summer (March end-October) and winter (October end-March end). Prior to each season, the Airport Authority of India and the airports declare the runway and terminal capacity to enable airlines to plan their schedules for the upcoming season. Slots for domestic and international flights are filed separately by airlines 4-5 months before the start of the schedule. A slot coordination committee with representatives of airlines, airports and the Directorate General of Civil Aviation meets before each season to approve the schedules.

How are slots allotted? What are historic slots?

An airline files for slots of all the flights it intends to operate in a particular season. An airline can retain a slot only if it uses it for 80 per cent of the time during a season. The “use it or lose it” principle decides the historicity over slots. If an airline has used a slot for 80 per cent of the time in the summer schedule, it gains historicity over it for the next summer schedule. In view of the pandemic, regulators worldwide have suspended the “use it or lose it” principle.

For Jet Airways, the civil aviation ministry said it will not be entitled for historicity over its previously allotted slots. NCLT, too, rejected the Kalrock-Jalan consortium’s demand for historicity over slots.

Are new airlines at a disadvantage in getting slots?

A new airline can get only those slots that are available after allocation to all existing airlines and those surrendered by incumbents. New airlines get a priority over 50 per cent of the remaining slots at an airport. However, for each new entrant, priority is limited to a maximum of five daily slots at an airport. This priority is available at the time of its first filing only. In constrained airports like Mumbai or Delhi, there may be few spare slots. Airports also prioritise slot allocation on the basis of new routes and year-round operations. For instance, if an airline seeks to open a new route to a tier II/III city or helps the airport to become a hub for connecting traffic, such slot requests could get a priority. Priority could also be given to airlines seeking year-long operations over those seeking permission for a seasonal flight.

What details do airports seek from new airlines before allocating slots?

A new airline will have to submit its fleet induction plan to

NUMBER WISE

THE YEARS LOST TO COVID-19

ABHISHEK WAGHMARE
Pune, 29 June

Three key questions give a sense of how the pandemic has cost the country.

How much did the economy lose since the pandemic began?
The pandemic chipped away 7.3 per cent of India’s real gross domestic product (GDP) in 2020-21. (Real GDP is the GDP in nominal rupee terms adjusted for inflation.) Consumers spending fell 9 per cent and investments contracted by more than 10 per cent. Manufacturing, services and construction lost 7-9 per cent in value. Agriculture was the only sector to record an increase in its gross value added (GVA).

How grave was the loss?
GVA levels in the last few years in nominal rupee terms, without considering the impact of inflation, show how much of the nominal value was lost over time. Major sectors lost the value created in the last two-three years.

In 2020-21, GVA in manufacturing, trade, transport and communications was close to the 2017-18 levels. Value lost in construction was also similar; its GVA level last year was less than what was achieved in 2018-19. So, manufacturing lost three years of progress and construction lost two because of the pandemic-induced slowdown.

What about the loss in terms of goods and services consumed?
In April 2021, the sale, consumption or production in this area slipped back to levels achieved several years ago. For instance, the production index of core industries such as cement, refineries and steel was 126.7 — a level India had achieved back in March 2017.

If we look at the average output of the previous six months for a particular month, then too the output level as it stands today is what was achieved in January 2018. That’s a loss of three years of output.

Similarly, in April 2021, sales of passenger vehicles such as cars, SUVs, 12- and 20-seater travellers, etc, stood at 2016 levels — a loss of five years.

Electricity consumption during the second wave was the same as in 2014. And the distance covered by Indian trains was close to 2012 levels. Trains are an important indicator of mobility in India.

As for the sale of two-wheelers, the most important proxy indicator of India’s rural economic health, it plunged to levels achieved a decade ago.

PUSHED BACK IN TIME

In which month are we in terms of sale, production, consumption of major goods and services

An eyeball scan in exchange for crypto

ELLEN HUET & GILLIAN TAN
29 June

Sam Altman has a startup that intends to give a special type of cryptocurrency to every person on earth. But first, it wants to scan everybody’s eyeballs. The former head of the Silicon Valley business incubator Y Combinator is one of Worldcoin’s three founders. Among the many parts of its plan, Worldcoin has designed an orb-shaped device that would scan a person’s iris to build a unique personal identifier.

The company is backed by Andreessen Horowitz, the venture capital arm of Coinbase Global, LinkedIn founder Reid Hoffman and Day One Ventures. It recently raised about $25 million from investors.

Altman, 36, said he conceived the idea in late 2019. The intention was to use cryptocurrency to spread money around equitably, inspired by the trendy economic theory known as universal basic income. “I’ve been very interested in things like universal basic income and what’s going to happen to global wealth redistribution and how we can do that better,” he said. “Is there a way we can use technology to do that at global scale?”

Worldcoin is still preparing for a formal unveiling, but for now, it is evaluating what it might take to one day get cryptocurrency to as many as possible. Under Altman, Y Combinator planned experiments on universal basic income that have faced some delays and complications. In a 2019 interview with economist Tyler Cowen, Altman discussed how a system that could distribute money to all could circumvent the need for government redistribution.

With Worldcoin, it promises “a new global digital currency that will launch by giving a share to every single person on earth”, says an online job description. BLOOMBERG
